THE BEE GEES 20th

This year the three Gibb brothers, who collectively form The Bee Gees, celebrate their twentieth year in showbusiness. They first appeared together in 1955 entertaining the crowds between shows at a Manchester Cinema for only a shilling each. Since then they have sold more than 25 million records throughout the world, have had many of their compositions recorded by the world's leading pop artists and through their extensive international tours they have become one of music's most popular acts. Robert Stigwood and R.S.O. Records are proud to mark The Bee Gees 20th Anniversary with their latest album "Main Course" and single "Jive Talkin".

The Bee Gees in Australia, 1962.

Germany, 1968

Act I: "Arrival and Success"

One foggy English eve back in '67 three young men stepped off a ship just in from Australia. The five week journey had brought brothers Barry, Robin and Maurice Gibb, the Bee Gees, to Britain.

Barry reminisces, "We came off the ship and the first people we met was another group. They said, 'Go back, go back, the Walker Brothers are nothing any more. It's all Eric Clapton now.' We talked awhile and they really tried to dissuade us from trying to make it in England. That more or less gave us the added incentive to give it a go."

Contrary to common belief the Bee Gees weren't the top group in Australia and they hadn't scored a string of hits. In fact they were literally on the ship to England when they received word of their first chart-topper, "Spicks And Specks". But it was too late, they had already decided on a fresh start.

"When we arrived in England our producer told us we could use an orchestra. We went, 'What?'. We could not believe it. That's what we wanted in Australia but couldn't get. Within five weeks we released a single, 'New York Mining Disaster' and 'I Can't See Nobody', explained Maurice.

This single and the next three, all released in 1967, went top fifteen in America (not to mention the score of other countries where they did likewise). So the worldwide hits had come. And the tours too. (One of the early tours featured a concert at London's Royal Albert Hall—the Bee Gees were backed by a sixty piece orchestra, a choir and a Royal Air Force Brass Band!)

The Bee Gees, a group with a totally new and fresh approach to rock music and the rock ballad had definitely arrived.

The albums also threw the music world on its collective ear. The classic "Bee Gees First" is still much discussed and praised; a collection of songs at least equal to anyone's. The unique Bee Geeian style developed even further with the second L.P., "Horizontal" and "classical rock" was here to stay.

The Bee Gees' first American top tenner came in '68 with "I've Gotta Get A Message To You". This was the first of two singles that were to be taken from the third Bee Gees' L.P., "Idea". The second one was, "I Started A Joke" which was even a bigger smash than "Message", going to the top five spot in the charts.

Act II: "Hassles and Separate Ways"

In '69 intergroup problems and pressures culminated in Robin leaving the band. His split was surrounded by quite a hullabaloo. After all, Barry and Maurice were his brothers. The English press had a field day interviewing, postulating and generally making the whole thing seem a lot nastier than it actually was.

Barry and Maurice continued to record and release records as the Bee Gees while Robin recorded solo. His debut single, "Saved By The Bell" was an enormous smash in nearly all parts of the world, except America. It only failed to hit number one in England due to the Rolling Stone's "Honky Tonk Woman" refusal to budge.

Soon after Barry and Maurice followed their incredible "Tomorrow Tomorrow" with "Don't Forget To Remember", which topped the U.K. charts. They released a very fine album, "Cucumber Castle" which featured songs from the British T.V. special of the same name.

Robin released a solo L.P., "Robin's Reign", of which he says, "In my own eyes I didn't finish the album. It wasn't something that I was into. It didn't have the continuity I wanted. It only came out because Polydor wanted it to."

While America had quieted for the Bee Gees during the split, other countries still revered them. For instance in Germany where in the beginning they became bigger than the Beatles or Stones; during one point in the split the last L.P. recorded with Robin, the magnificent double set, "Odessa" was number one and the earlier L.P., "Idea" was also in the top five. At the same time Robin topped the German singles charts, while Barry and Maurice had both "Don't Forget" and "Tomorrow" in the top fifteen.

The next crisis came when Barry and Maurice decided to call it quits. Each went off and recorded solo L.P.'s and singles. (The 45s were released but the albums have never been.) It looked like the end of the Bee Gees.

Act III: "Reunion and Bigger Than Ever" or "Hello, Hello, We're Back Again"

After two years the brothers decided to give it another go. The first music to emerge from their reunion was the world-wide smash hit, "Lonely Days". This record gave them their first American number one—a fitting beginning to a new era in their evolution. An excellent L.P. came next, appropriately titled, "Two Years On".

The following single, "How Can You Mend A Broken Heart" turned out, not only to be bigger than "Lonely Days" ("Heart" was number one for a month) but it was one of the year's most recorded tunes.

INTERVIEWS

The ensuing L.P., "Trafalgar" was even heavier on classical influence than the early albums. Would the Bee Gees consider doing a full "opera" i.e. "Tommy"?

BARRY: "It's a good idea alright but I don't know if it's a good idea for us."

ROBIN: "We've done a thing that other people have copied. We look for new ideas that are exclusive to the Bee Gees and what we've been doing."

BARRY: "We like to put a whole story in one song rather than one story on one album."

ON THE SUBJECT OF TOURING:

ROBIN: "We try to play at only philharmonic-type places...the music we have to offer wouldn't really be appreciated at Madison Square Garden."

MAURICE: "We'd rather have the people sit and listen than scream and yell their heads off."

ROBIN: "At the time we were coming up as a big teenybopper group. Then suddenly someone heard us singing and said, 'Stop the crowds, wait a minute these guys are doing things'."

MAURICE: "It used to annoy us immensely. They'd be going raving mad, screaming their heads off and we'd be doing 'Holiday'. We'd be playing a lovely melody thing with a big orchestra and they'd be shrieking, 'Barry, Maurice, Robin'."

BARRY: "We've been through all the stages, struggling and then hitting it big, we've split and re-formed, had number ones, toured the world. Of course we want to continue improving in all areas but our main concern now is strong L.P.'s."

And where are the Bee Gees currently? Well there's a good chance that they're either recording their next smash single or superb L.P. or...they're off in some part of the world singing and playing to an appreciative audience.

The Bee Gees—a fine tradition.

THE SINGERS WRITE THEIR SONGS

Barry, Robin and Maurice Gibb rank with the most prolific songwriters in popular music. Since arriving in England in 1967 they have only recorded their own self-penned tunes. And these tunes have been covered by hundreds of artists. Artists as diverse as Elvis to Jose Feliciano. Cher to Janis Joplin and Al Green to Andy Williams.
